he will take an active part next year."

"You say you have ust left a leading Massachusetts Republican; how do you regard the situation there?"

"Massachusetts is the only State where the President has gone anywhere near fulfilling his pledge of Civil Service reform, and consequently that is the only State where his party has thrown him over. The last ticket was nominated frankly ugainst Mugwataps and Civil Service reformers, and the Mugwataps are in a quandary, knowing not where to turn. It is a first-class punishment. A great many supported tovering against Lodge for sheer spite, and now they are absolutely illogical in refusing to support him for Governor. This action shows how entirely without principle they were in not supporting Lodge as heartily as possible."

General Greeley in his annual report says of the homing pigeon as a means of communication that a stock of these pigeons has been placed at the disposal of the chief signal officers by the breeders, and it is intended to make careful experiments during the coming year, since such will not entail any considerable expense. Careful attention has been paid to these birds, both in France and Germany, so that, in the local military centres of each this year, have called for the abolition of rountry, well trained b.rds, perfectly rethe duties on imported "raw materials," liable for distances up to 200 miles are-to in order to reduce the revenue (which be found. a poor mad woman, misled by the delusion of a deranged midt?"

Dr. Wybrow rose from h.s. chair, deternaned to close the interview.

He was strongly and plainfully impressed by what he had heard. The longer he had listened to her the more freesitbly the conviction of the woman's wickendess had forced itself upon him. He tried vainly to think of her as a person to be pittod—a person with a morbidly senadive imagination, conscious of the capacities for evil which lie dormant in a all, and striving carnestly to open her her at the counter influence of her own better nature; the effort was beyond him. A perverse instinct in him said, as if in words, "Boware how you believe in her?"

"I have already given you my opinion," he said. "There is no sign of your intellect being deranged, or being likely to be deranged, that medical science can discover—as I understand it. As for the impressious you have confided to me i can only any that yours is a case (as I vaneure to think!) for spiritual rather than for medical advice. Of one thing be assured—what you have said to me in this room shall not passont of it. Your confession is safe in my keeping."

She heard him, with a curtain dogged resignation, to the end.

"Is that all?" she saked!

letter had left him any hope of bring forgiven i would have positively refused to marry him. But the firmness of it—without anger, without a word of reproach, with heartfelt wishes even for his happiness—the firmness of it. I say, left him no hope. He appealed to my compassion, he appealed to his love for me You know what women are I was too soft hearted I said, Yery well, yes? So it ended. In a week more (I tremble as I ropeat it) we are to be married."

She dat really tremble—she was obliged to pause and compose herself, before she could go on. The doctor, waiting for more facts, began to fear that he stood committed to a long story.

"Think you, sir There is your fee."
With those words the rose, 'I me wild black eyes looked upward with a expression of despair so defiant and so borrible in its silent agony that the dector turned away his head unable to endure the eight of it. The bare it en of taking anything from beri-not money only, but sought ng even that she had touched—suddenly ravelted him.' Still, with out looking at her, he zaid, "Take it back; I don't want any fee." "It is one fact, sir, that I am a widow," she said "It is another fact that Pm going to be married again in a week's time."

There she paused and smiled at some thought that occurred to her Dr Wybrow was not favorably impressed by her smile—there was something at or ce sad and cruel in it. It came slowly and it went away suddenly Ho began to do lib whether he had been wise in acting on his first impression. His mind reverted to the commonplace patients and the discoverable maladies that were waiting for him, with a certain tender regret.

were waiting for him, with a certain tender regret.

The lady went on

"My approaching marriage," she said, "has one embarrassing circumstance connected with it. The gentleman whose wife I am to be was engaged to another independent on the proposed to the said when he happened to the as his course. I have innocently robbed her of her lover and destroyed her prospects in life. Innocently, I say—because he told me nothing of his engagement until after I had accepted him. When we next met in England—and when there was danger, no doubt, of the affair coming to my knowledge—he told me the truth. I was naturally indignant. He had his excuse ready. He showed me a letter from the lad / heriesif releasing him from his engagement. A more noble, a more high minded letter/Inever read in my life. out looking at her, he said, "Take is back; I don't want any fee."

She melther heeded nor heard him. Still looking upward, she said, slowly, to berself. "Let the end come I have done with the struggle, I sabmit."

She drew her vell over her face, bowed to the dector and left the room.

He rang the bell and followed her into the halt. As the servant cased the door on her, a sudden impulse of curiosity—utterly un worthy of him, and ab the same time irresistible—spring up in the coctor's mind. Blushing like a boy, he said to the servant. "For one moment the mai coked at his master, doubting if his own surs had not deceived him. Dr Wybrow loar's back at h.m. in a lence. ried hito the street

The dector went back to the consulting room A sudden revul- on of feeling swept over his mind. Had the woman left an infection of mulkodness in the house, and had he caught it? What devil had possessed him to degrade himself in the eyes of his own servant? He had behaved infamously—he had asked an honest man, a man who had served in a faithfully for years! to turn spy! Sting by the bare thought of it, he ran out into the hall again and opened it a door. The servant had disampeared it was too late to call him back. But one refuge against his contempt for himself was now open to him—the refuge of work. He got into his carriage and went his rounds among his parients.

If the famous physician could have staken his own reputation, he would have done it that afternoon. Never before had be made himself to little welcome at the bedside. Never before had he put off until to-merrow the prescription which ought to have been written, the opinion which ought to have been given today. He went home earlier than usual—unutterably dissansfled with himself.
